

Art and Museum Law

Sponsored by

Thomas M. Cooley Law School
Michigan Museums Association

This new Art and Museum Law Journal is dedicated to the legal and public policy issues of the visual arts and museums. This publication is unique in that it is limited to the legal issues of the visual arts. It is co-sponsored by the Cooley Law School (the largest law school in the nation) and by the Michigan Museums Association.

The journal is designed and written to be of interest to lawyers, judges, legislators, curators, collectors, and artists, i.e. all of those professionals interested in the public policy regarding the visual arts and museums.

At this time, there are other law reviews dedicated to the arts but these journals also cover entertainment and sports. Over time, these journals have moved increasingly to articles about film, music, and sports. This new and exciting publication limits itself to the visual arts alone.

The Michigan Museums Association brings its 400 non-lawyer Michigan members to this effort. This blend of a law school and a professional organization appeals to the interests of both groups in one publication. This blending of professional interests greatly benefits both groups.
